Ex-regent donates bronze cougars

FROM NEWS AND INFORMATION

Two bronze Cougar statues given to WSU for the entrance to the Beasley Performing Arts Coliseum were dedicated by President Samuel Smith in a ceremony Saturday.

The cougars, which are poised as if standing guard over the coliseum's south entrance, were given to WSU by former WSU Regent Robert Gibb and his wife, Ruth. They are replicas of the statues Crouching Cougars, created by the late Avard T. Fairbanks for the Hogle Zoological Gardens in Salt Lake City in the 1940s.

Called one of the most prolific and talented sculptors of the 20th century, Fairbanks' sculptures are seen nationwide, including at the University of Idaho, where in 1921 he created Idaho Doughboy, a heroic statue memorializing World War I.

Robert Gibb graduated from WSU in 1944 in general studies and pre-medicine and completed a medical degree at Washington University. Ruth Gibb graduated from WSU in 1945 with a degree in home economics. Since 1954, they have lived in Bellingham, where Gibb was the owner and medical director of Gibb Laboratory and Whatcom Pathology Laboratory until retiring in 1990.
