undoubtedly of more harm than their crime. As long as police are going to enforce laws merely because those laws are on the books, then let's see a stop put to homosexuality. Why not ignore the right of two consenting adults to do whatever they deem "the pursuit of happiness?" Archaic laws banning all sexual positions except the "normal" missionary position still exist. Don't these laws create more severe problems than those with which they deal?

The abolition of laws pertaining to restrictions on civil liberties and victimless crime is too lengthy a topic to discuss here. All I ask is that students make their wishes known. At the site of another university, Ann Arbor, Mich., student pressure resulted in the decriminalization of marijuana to the extent of only a $5 ticket being given for possession. I would not mind seeing the same thing here.

Write to life

I am walking down the street in a Pullman drizzle whistling "Lady Be Good." It is a happy tune that reflects my benevolence with the world even though trucks are splashing mud on me.

Sudden'y the mind police come roaring out from the storm drains and slap me into shackles. The Mind Police are a dreary lot dedicated to the preservation of sullenness.

"Why you so happy, boy," snaps the head mind policeman.

"Oh, I'm sorry. I did not know it was illegal to be happy in public. I'll try to be more pessimistic in the future." I lied.

"Ignorance is no excuse for breaking behavioral laws. We're taking you in."

I smiled radiantly and the mind fuzz beat a retreat back into the depths that spawned them. The mind police do not like brightness.

The skies soon cleared and my good spirit accelerated to an incredible peak, where whistling could never do justice to the balm beating within my breast. Against all laws governing public conduct, I burst into song.

Smiling at strangers is considered to be immoral behavior, and whistling your happiness to anybody within earshot is grounds for commitment. If you sing in public, alarms alert the world to a happy person wandering at large.

A happy person is a threat to people who battle against the great issues of this era. With the stock market diving to inflated lows, the drought, Dixie Lee Ray, and Idi Amin depressing our society to the brink of neurosis; it becomes one's duty to sulk. Guilt complexes are only allowed Christmas, Thanksgiving, and Spring Vacation for a holiday.

Saying hello to people that you don't know marks you as a deviate flaunting indecent awareness that other people are walking on the same Earth as yourself.

Some folks idealize the small town phenomom of being neighborly to your neighbors, and they spout platitudes about the brotherhood of man. If we would only show a little good nature in this often hostile world, the mind police could be stomped out of existence.

Should you hear someone whistling a happy tune, join in and chase dismalness away.
